Workplace Injuries and Injury Claims are often physically and emotionally hard as the hurt person should pursue an injury claim while likewise suffering from the injury.

In exchange for giving up their right to take legal action against work-related injuries; staff receive guaranteed compensation for accepted claims under the workers insurance system. Using premiums, the employer finances the program. This is of benefit to the employer, who receives protection from court cases under this system of collective liability. Injured employees along with their love ones are given fair compensation, whilst costs are spread among employers.

Staff may however, file a suit against employees in some situations. Workers could take legal action against staff that are industry exempt from the workers insurance program. Employees can sue fellow employees if they were "outside the course of their employment" when the injury occurred. A worker may be entitled to settlement under the insurance plan with respect to a disease or an injury, and could also be entitled to sue a person in respect of the injury; for instance, an individual driving in the course of their employment may file a suit against the driver of the vehicle which injured them.
